

National Indigenous Network Initiative

Transforming lives.

We help make individuals better and our communities stronger and safer.

NINI acknowledges the pain many Indigenous people have suffered as a result of colonisation, racism and dispossession. If you are seeking support to work through any grief, loss and trauma we are here to help you reclaim your best self.

Many clients are prompted to begin their journey with us needing support and guidance because they have perpetrated violence, abuse or controlling behaviours or they are victim survivors of it. As specialists with the lived experience and training to deliver culturally appropriate approaches we improve lives - aiming for rapid practical wins and deeper holistic change.

Our key services:

Everyone has a right to feel safe.

Our Founder and CEO, Robert Leidig, is a Ramindjeri man from SA. Robert has worked for over 25 years in Aboriginal services and he is deeply committed to transforming the lives of Indigenous people and communities who are seeking to improve their social, emotional wellbeing.

“Our logo design represents the Ramindjeri dreaming story of Kondoli. It symbolises that the power of transformation exists in anyone”.

National Indigenous Network Initiative

Through yarning, connecting and counselling.

NINI has specialist Narrative and general counsellors ready to support you. Just make the call to arrange an appointment.

NINI is an Indigenous owned and operated charity. It is for Indigenous people, we deliver services to Indigenous people, particularly through culturally safe counselling.

A client receiving counselling said
“Thanks Rob, I appreciate your help and support. It means a lot to myself and my family.”

NINI values anonymity, privacy & confidentiality

We help clients see and achieve an improved life by providing culturally appropriate support, giving them the understanding and the skills to see and realise short-term and longer-term goals. The client’s idea of the life they want becomes a shared aspiration that we help them achieve.

NINI promotes safety for all Indigenous people - we make safety and wellbeing the highest priorities for Indigenous people.
